Scope and Content of Collection

The original accession of papers donated during the lifetime of Friedrich A. von Hayek, relates to laissez-faire economics and associated concepts of liberty, and especially to activities of the Mont Pèlerin Society as documented in diaries, correspondence, speeches and writings, notes, conference papers, conference programs, printed matter, sound recordings, and photographs. Materials of the same time periods may also be found in the Incremental Materials. Sound use copies of sound recordings available. Most of collection (Boxes 1-118) also available on microfilm (91 reels).

Scope and Content of Incremental Materials

The two sections of incremental materials of the Friedrich A. von Hayek papers constitute a significant part of the collection, representing nearly half of the entire papers. The materials were received after Hayek's death from his family and his longtime secretary, Charlotte Cubitt. Consisting largely of correspondence, speeches and writings, and notes, they document Hayek's career as an economist and his larger role as a public intellectual advocating free market principles and denouncing state intervention in matters of economic and social policy. The materials provide insight into the development of Hayek's thought as a leading figure of the Austrian School of economics, and they also record the influence of his ideas on the political debates of his time, especially in the United States and Great Britain.

The two Correspondence series in the incremental materials include exchanges of letters with fellow economists, publishers, and individuals active in the institutions with which Hayek was associated. Among the latter are colleagues and officials at the universities (London School of Economics, University of Chicago) where Hayek taught, as well as fellow members of the Mont Pèlerin Society, an organization founded by Hayek and in which he played a leading role for many years. The series contains Hayek's correspondence with economists associated with the Institute of Economic Affairs (Ralph Harris and Arthur Seldon, among others) and British politicians influenced by his ideas, including Margaret Thatcher. There is also extensive correspondence between Hayek and William W. Bartley, the editor of his final book, The Fatal Conceit. The incremental materials also include a separate correspondence series relating to Charlotte Cubitt, and which dates from the last period of Hayek's life when he was in declining health.

The two Speeches and Writings series in the incremental materials span nearly the whole of Hayek's prolific career as an author. They include early articles and book reviews, unpublished manuscripts on economics and psychology, and various prefaces and introductions prepared for foreign editions of his books. There are a number of speeches, as well as letters written to the editor of The Times of London. The series also contain drafts of such major works as The Road to Serfdom, the three volumes that comprise Law, Legislation and Liberty, and Hayek's final book, The Fatal Conceit. There are multiple versions of chapters of The Fatal Conceit, showing Hayek's corrections and revisions, and allowing for a comparison of Hayek's original conception of the work with its ultimate, published form, whose extensive editing has been the subject of some controversy. Additionally, the Reviews of works by and about Hayek series in the second part of the incremental materials collects commentary on many of Hayek's published works. There is an abundance of reviews of The Road to Serfdom, most dating from the time of its original publication, but also some relating to subsequent editions, including translations. These articles show the success that the book achieved with the general public as well as demonstrating its impact on editorial and scholarly opinion at the time.

There is a significant amount of documentation on Hayek's personal and professional lives in the two Biographical file series in the incremental materials. The second section contains many articles and clippings relating to Hayek, as well as some autobiographical writings, including a travel journal kept during a trip to France and Italy. In addition, there is a lengthy oral history consisting of extensive interviews with Hayek that were conducted by scholars under the auspices of the University of California at Los Angeles. There are also many clippings and other articles about Hayek in the Scrapbooks series of the second section of incremental materials.

The large Notes series in the second part of the incremental materials is comprised largely of notebooks, containing Hayek's notes on specific subjects, and a vast quantity of note cards, some of which relate to the writing of The Fatal Conceit. There are also many unsorted note cards pertaining largely to economics and philosophy, and whose diverse topics are indicative of the scope of Hayek's intellectual interests.

The two Academic career file series contain lectures given by Hayek in his capacity as a professor of economics, including his earliest lectures in Great Britain. The two Writings by others series consists largely of articles, many of which touch on themes in Hayek's work. The second part of the incremental materials contains a Photographs series with numerous prints depicting Hayek, including ones relating to meetings of the Mont Pèlerin Society.

Box/Folder 117 : 10	Sound recording of an address by FAH, Institute of Humane Studies, Menlo Park, California 1977 June 10
	Note
	A more complete copy of this session is available in the Institute for Humane Studies miscellaneous records at the Hoover Archives. That copy (86002_a_0003731) also features the remarks of other speakers at the session who refer to Hayek
	Scope and Content Note
	Hayek reflects on the difficulty of educating intellectuals (the "irresponsible ignorant intellectual") on the free enterprise system. Intellectuals, Hayek argues, maintain an outmoded moral view that is incompatible with, and ultimately destructive to, a modern market economy. 1 cassette. Use copy reference number: 86002_a_0003732
