HISTORY

Yosemite's Division of Facilities Management is responsible for the operation and maintenance of roads, trails, bridges, historic structures, housing units, and utility systems. Since its inception in 1916 the National Park Service has been entrusted with the care of facilities at Yosemite, and the Facilities Management Division, under various names over the years, has been instrumental in that care. Originally organized by labor divisions in the early 20th Century: plumbing, carpentry, black smiths, and power plant operations, the division came to be known as Facilities Management in 2000. Reflected in the collection are many of the major events and change points that the division has adapted to and/or helped to implement: increased visitation (from 68,906 in 1920 to more than four million currently); the National Environmental Policy Act (1970); Mission 66; the General Master Plan (1974); the Architectural Barriers Act (1968); the Americans With Disabilities Act (1990); the Yosemite Valley Plan; the 1997 Merced River flood; and the Tuolumne Wild and Scenic River Plan (1990), among many others. Comprised of four Branches: Design and Engineering, Buildings and Grounds, Roads and Trails, and Utilities, the largest division in the park provides engineering support, operation and maintenance functions, energy use monitoring, surveying, mapping, historic preservation, and facilities inventories.

The Facilities Management Records reflect the scale and challenges involved in maintaining a national park the size of Yosemite. As of 2013, the four branches of the division were responsible for 214 miles of paved roads, 68 miles of graded roads, 20 miles of paved walkways and bike paths, 800 miles of trails, 1504 campsites, 1133 structures, more than 120 pedestrian and vehicle bridges, and four tunnels, as well as all of the utilities necessary to support more than four million visitors each year.
